Dear Mac:

We are most gratified that you have expressed a willingness to come and talk to the members of our first Midcareer Course on "The Role of the Executive Office and the Presidential Staff in the Development and Execution of National Policy."

The presentation has been scheduled from 1330 to 1630 on Wednesday, 30 October, at the Brookings Institution. We would like to suggest about an hour's lecture, using the balance of the time as an informal question and answer session with the students.

This student group consists of thirty experienced intelligence officers who represent the future leadership of the Agency. Your participation will provide them with a most valuable insight into the problems of decision-making at the executive level in Government.

Your interest is greatly appreciated, and your participation will be one of the real highlights of our program.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) Lyman B. Kirkpatrick
